BILDERBERG MEETINGS

What are the Bilderberg Meetings?

The Official Bilderberg Website states the following blurb:

“Founded in 1954, Bilderberg is an annual conference designed to foster dialogue between Europe and North America. Every year, between 120-150 political leaders and experts from industry, finance, academia and the media are invited to take part in the conference. About two thirds of the participants come from Europe and the rest from North America; approximately one third from politics and government and the rest from other fields.

The conference is a forum for informal discussions about major issues facing the world. The meetings are held under the Chatham House Rule, which states that participants are free to use the information received, but neither the identity nor the affiliation of the speaker(s) nor of any other participant may be revealed.

Thanks to the private nature of the conference, the participants are not bound by the conventions of their office or by pre-agreed positions. As such, they can take time to listen, reflect and gather insights.

There is no desired outcome, no resolutions are proposed, no votes are taken, and no policy statements are issued.”

Which although true to large degree, only goes part of the way to explaining the purpose, structure and procedures of Bilderberg.

The Bilderberg steering committee members are usually long served members of the Bilderberg Group and they are the people who help set the agenda for that years meeting. The steering committee members are responsible for scouting for and vetting, potential useful new members within each of their own countries. The steering committees are hoping to bring into the wider group, new people who may have knowledge or expertise in a particular field, which can be beneficial for the rest of the group to sound out on any particular topic. It should be noted that there seems to be a pattern of Bilderberg recruiting politicians who exist, or may eventually exist in a place to have economic policy control over a country. As well as regular attendees, there are usually a few guest attendees each year. Of these guest participants, many are only invited once, having either been deemed unsuitable to the groups goals, or their contribution welcome and insightful, but also not really suitable to wider goals aimed for by Bilderberg.

How do the Bilderberg Meetings work?

These are known facts about Bilderberg meeting procedure.

- Participants are given a few background papers for the agenda to be covered, by the Bilderberg Secretariat, ahead of the conference.
- On arrival participants receive a conference portfolio, giving detailed information on the schedule and procedures of the conference, lay-out of the site, seating arrangements in the conference room, the final list of participants, and other supporting information.
- Over the course of the meetings, each agenda item is given a meeting of roughly 40 minutes to 90 minutes of discussion time. And each delegate, is expected to participate in the full conference programme, unless already agreed with the Bilderberg Chairman.
- Each agenda item has a designated moderator, and between one to three panelist speakers who debate the agenda item, and take interventions from the floor. The Bilderberg secretariat shares moderator contact details with each panelist to help coordinate their presentation with the other panelists, prior to making their presentation.
- The expected tradition of Bilderberg, is that there are no formal speeches and no read texts, as experience shows that spontaneous presentations are most successful. Most of each session is devoted to the discussion among panelists and participants.
- Moderators are strongly encouraged to lead the debate from a substance point of view: the discussion kept within the framework of key questions outlined briefly at the start each session. Each panelist is expected not to exceed speaking longer than 10 minutes when making their introductory statement.
- The moderator is asked to summarise the rules for intervention at the opening of the session to make sure that all attendees understand the strict application of the 1, 3 and 5 minute system. Moderators should only permit "1 minute interventions" which are really addressed to the points then being discussed.
- Each participant is expected to have contributed a meaningful intervention, at least once during the conference. As they are invited there to 'sing for their supper', have their 'brains picked' and prove their worth to the wider group.
- Participants are expected not to give interviews to the press during the meetings, a point which is expected to be strictly adhered to, especially with guests contacts with news media. So that no attribution can be made to a particular participant of what has been discussed during the meeting.
- After each conference, a summary report of each meeting is given to each participant. The summary includes the names of all participants, and opinions are summarized; speakers are not referred to by name. The report may also contain a summary of any ground of consensus reached between participants.
- This conference report is circulated only to participants, former participants, potential participants, and sponsors of the Bilderberg Meetings.

All the previous stated facts shown overleaf, when taken together, give reasonable grounds to think that the Bilderberg standard blurb that “There is no desired outcome, no resolutions are proposed, no votes are taken, and no policy statements are issued.” rings somewhat hollow.

For example

- Why are participants prepped before hand with background papers from other political or business lobbys?
- Why are the areas of consensus and opinion summaries printed and issued to each participant, for them to use at will, as long as they do not attribute the source?
- What is the exact role of pre-meeting contact with the discussion moderators?
- Bilderberg Conference reports are already anonymised to a fair degree, so why are they withheld from general public consumption, when many of the participants are supposed to be elected public officials?

It should also be bared in mind, that informal discussions also play a large part of the conference meetings, which one might reasonably assume, is actually the real main reason why the conferences are held at all.

i.e. To network, socialise and bring potentially useful people into the sphere of influence of the wider group, and thus further Bilderberg international consensus, out of the eyes of the general public, and out of democratic oversight.

All participants highlighted in red were serving publicly elected politicians at the time of their attendance.

As Bilderberg meetings are held under the Chatham House Rule, this effectively blocks public accountability and scrutiny of politicians engaged in such proceedings. This brings a conflict of interest, between serving democracy, and the privacy needs of the international elite.

House of Commons - Code of Conduct

IV. General Principles of Conduct

In carrying out their parliamentary and public duties, Members will be expected to observe the following general principles of conduct identified by the Committee on Standards in Public Life in its First Report as applying to holders of public office. These principles will be taken into account when considering the investigation and determination of any allegations of breaches of the rules of conduct in Part V of the Code.

Selflessness

Holders of public office should take decisions solely in terms of the public interest. They should not do so in order to gain financial or other material benefits for themselves, their family, or their friends.

Integrity

Holders of public office should not place themselves under any financial or other obligation to outside individuals or organisations that might influence them in the performance of their official duties.

Objectivity

In carrying out public business, including making public appointments, awarding contracts, or recommending individuals for rewards and benefits, holders of public office should make choices on merit.

Accountability

Holders of public office are accountable for their decisions and actions to the public and must submit themselves to whatever scrutiny is appropriate to their office.

Openness

Holders of public office should be as open as possible about all the decisions and actions that they take. They should give reasons for their decisions and restrict information only when the wider public interest clearly demands.

Honesty

Holders of public office have a duty to declare any private interests relating to their public duties and to take steps to resolve any conflicts arising in a way that protects the public interest.

Leadership

Holders of public office should promote and support these principles by leadership and example.

This document is dedicated to the journalistic work of Daniel Estulin, Tony Gosling, James P. Tucker Jr., Charlie Skelton, Ian Richardson, Andrew & Nada Kakabadse, Luke Rudkowski and the team at We Are Change, Alex Jones and his excitable Prison Planet team, the numerous Bilderberg hunters all over the world and the few Bilderberg insiders willing to place Bilderberg documents into the public domain.
